ingenuous perſon, Chriſtopher Waſe, hath publiſhed a more contracted Dictionary, a compend of Calepine, a Book of good uſe.

Having thus led the Reader with the ſeries of time through the moſt conſiderable Works of this Nature, now let him take this account of the Book before him. As to the adding this Dictionary after others that have been well reputed and are uſeful, let it be conſidered, That they were written one after another, and that was no hinderance to their Authours pains or others acceptance: yea others of late in other Countries have been and are ſtill adding new to the old: and who can fix the time when ſuch Works are at the height of all deſirable or poſſible Perfection, where Hercules's Pillars may be placed with a Ne plus ultra? Nay, it will appear by what followeth, that even the later Dictionaries have been defective: Moreover they, as hath been repreſented, had their Amendments and Increaſe by ſucceſſive Endeavours and Editions, raiſing them to that pitch wherein they ſtand. As to what hath been endeavoured, and (we doubt not) in good meaſure performed in this Edition, we will ſpeak to the ſeveral parts of the Book diſtinctly.

As to that Part which hath the Engliſh before the Latin;

The Engliſh it ſelf is very much reſtored where faulty and miſ-ſpelled in former Dictionaries: And in the Latin of them many faults corrected.

The leading Words are put generally into their natural Order and due place, whereas before they were much tranſpoſed.

Many Heads of Engliſh with their Latin ſupplied: And very many Additional Latin Words Inſerted in their places under the former Engliſh; both, by a modeſt computation, amounting to at leaſt Ten Thouſand. And this not without furtherance by a Folio Manuſcript, which ſeemeth to be of good Antiquity and Precedent to Rider. So that there is a conſiderable Acceſſion, as may appear to the Peruſer.

As to that Part which hath the Latin before the Engliſh;

Multitudes of Faults amended in the Words, both Latin, Greek, Hebrew and Engliſh.

The Senſe which was ſometimes unintelligible, and ſometimes lame and defective, is now made Entire and Plain, ſo far as brevity would permit.

The joyning with good Coherence of ſeveral Deſigns in other Dictionaries, in one Volume in This, is conſiderable. Formerly the Pure and Proper Latin Words were in one Alphabet; the Obſolete, Antique and Antiquated Words in another, to the trouble of Him that ſearched for a Word. And if it be inquired, why thoſe Words that are of a baſer Allay are not by ſome Mark diſtinguiſhed from the more currant and uſual Words: Let it be conſidered; Firſt, That it is hard to ſet the juſt Boundaries and Landmarks of the more approvable Latin, and that which by Degrees crept in with the declinings of the Empire, decay of Learning and mixture of Barbarous Nations. Secondly, That this part of a Dictionary is little conſulted, but for the underſtanding of a Word found in an Authour, and doth not conſiderably belong to the making of Latin. Beſides, that the Nature of the Authours quoted generally intimateth when a Word is ſuſpicious for purity, and when not. Moreover, formerly the Etymologies and Notations of the Word were chiefly minded by ſome, the Inſtances of Uſe, and Phraſes in Authours moſt attended by others: This hath the former (and ſupplies that defect in Thomas) for the underſtanding of the whole Frame of the Latin Tongue, and its Derivations. ingenuous perſon, Chriſtopher Waſe, hath publiſhed a more contracted Dictionary, a compend of Calepine, a Book of good uſe.

Having thus led the Reader with the ſeries of time through the moſt conſiderable Works of this Nature, now let him take this account of the Book before him. As to the adding this Dictionary after others that have been well reputed and are uſeful, let it be conſidered, That they were written one after another, and that was no hinderance to their Authours pains or others acceptance: yea others of late in other Countries have been and are ſtill adding new to the old: and who can fix the time when ſuch Works are at the height of all deſirable or poſſible Perfection, where Hercules's Pillars may be placed with a Ne plus ultra? Nay, it will appear by what followeth, that even the later Dictionaries have been defective: Moreover they, as hath been repreſented, had their Amendments and Increaſe by ſucceſſive Endeavours and Editions, raiſing them to that pitch wherein they ſtand. As to what hath been endeavoured, and (we doubt not) good meaſure performed in this Edition, we will ſpeak to the ſeveral parts of the Book diſtinctly.

As to that Part which hath the Engliſh before the Latin;

The Engliſh it ſelf is very much reſtored where faulty and miſ-ſpelled in former Dictionaries: And in the Latin of them many faults corrected.

The leading Words are put generally into their natural Order and due place, whereas before they were much tranſpoſed.

Many Heads of Engliſh with their Latin ſupplied: And very many Additional Latin Words Inſerted in their places under the former Engliſh; both, by a modeſt computation, amounting to at leaſt Ten Thouſand. And this not without furtherance by a Folio Manuſcript, which ſeemeth to be of good Antiquity and Precedent to Rider. So that there is a conſiderable Acceſſion, as may appear to the Peruſer.

As to that Part which hath the Latin before the Engliſh;

Multitudes of Faults amended in the Words, both Latin, Greek, Hebrew and Engliſh.

The Senſe which was ſometimes unintelligible, and ſometimes lame and defective, is now made Entire and Plain, ſo far as brevity would permit.

The joyning with good Coherence of ſeveral Deſigns in other Dictionaries, in one Volume in This, is conſiderable. Formerly the Pure and Proper Latin Words were in one Alphabet; the Obſolete, Antique and Antiquated Words in another, to the trouble of Him that ſearched for a Word. And if it be inquired, why thoſe Words that are of a baſer Allay are not by ſome Mark diſtinguiſhed from the more currant and uſual Words: Let it be conſidered; Firſt, That it is hard to ſet the juſt Boundaries and Landmarks of the more approvable Latin, and that which by Degrees crept in with the declinings of the Empire, decay of Learning and mixture of Barbarous Nations. Secondly, That this part of a Dictionary is little conſulted, but for the underſtanding of a Word found in an Authour, and doth not conſiderably belong to the making of Latin. Beſides, that the Nature of the Authours quoted generally intimateth when a Word is ſuſpicious for purity, and when not. Moreover, formerly the Etymologies and Notations of the Word were chiefly minded by ſome; the Inſtances of Uſe, and Phraſes in Authours moſt attended by others: This hath the former (and ſupplies that defect in Thomas) for the underſtanding of the whole Frame of the Latin Tongue, and its Derivations. This hath alſo the Latter (therein ſupplying that great Defect in Rider and Holyoak;) Phraſes being a Clavis to Authours, letting us in to their Senſe and Meaning, Meaning, as alſo a Guide to the Genuine and Proper uſe of the Tongue. Beſides, that the Engliſh is very large in ſhewing the Signification of the Words, and ſupplies the abſence of ſome Phraſes, which to have put in, would have ſwoln the BOOK beyond bounds.

A conſiderable number of Words, never before in Thomas nor Holyoak, are added.

Many Pertinent and Excellent Philological Obſervations, Etymologies and Criticiſms, together with Enlargements in Phraſes and Engliſh inſerted.

Order exceedingly reſtored to the leading Words which were very un-Alphabetical before; as alſo to the Matter under them, which was very confuſed, and ſometimes the Remarks or Inſtances belonging to one Word were ſet under another. And this ſtrictneſs of Alphabetical Order obſerved, without prejudice to the meaneſt Readers underſtanding of the Primitive Word, for it is named in handling the Derivative, and the Reader directed to it.

Whereas in the former Edition the Quantities of Syllables were frequently omitted, or very much miſtaken; In This great care hath been uſed for the ſupplying of the one, and rectifying of the other. And for a farther help in due pronunciation of Words, and compoſing of Verſes, the Quantities of the Proper Names are added in this, of which heretofore no notice was taken.

Authours Names added where wanting and needful; rectified where miſtaken, and ſet to their Proper matter where miſplaced.

Capital and Italick letters uſed, to make more conſpicuous and more eaſily obſervable thoſe words and things which are moſt conſiderable. A thing before not minded.

As to that Part which contains the Proper Names;

The Principal Words handled were often miſrepreſented, but now much rectified; together with the matter under them.

Very many wholly new Added: As alſo ſome conſiderable things Adjoyned to the Old Heads; together with many modern Names of Places. And this by conſulting Ortelius his Theſaurus Geographicus, and the laſt and beſt, i. e. the London Edition of Ferrarius his Geographical Lexicon.

The Chronology often bettered. The Topography rendred more exact.

The Hiſtory, and Genealogy of Perſons much amended.

As to this and the Former Dictionary, the pointing regulated.

Beſides, a Catalogue of the Names of Authours at large Collected, for the ſatisfaction of all, and benefit of thoſe that could not well underſtand them by their initial Letters.

The other pieces Annexed have ſundry Amendments: and one added, which no former Dictionaries contained, viz. The old Names, by which Places, belonging to this Realm, were repreſented and known.

As to the whole, the Peruſer may find

Innumerable Emendations: ſome of which may (without a breach upon modeſty) be thought to have been the overſights and miſtakes of the Writers, however happily Induſtrious in moſt things: and others Proceeding from a not ſufficiently careful Printing of Books whoſe Fame did challenge Credit and Eſteem: the laſt Editions of theſe Books, as Ariſtotle ſaith of new Models of Government, having the Errours of the former beſide their own; the faults of the firſt, as Phyſicians write of the Concoctions, being ſeldom or never corrected in the following.

Great Enlargements: which the length and largeneſs of the Page abundantly demonſtrateth: ſo that this may be judged to contain more matter (beſide many thouſands of Amendments) by a third or fourth part then the laſt Editions either of Thomas or Rider, der, eſpecially conſidering many ſuperfluities cut off, repetitions prevented, and the Words and Matter cloſely couched and contracted, as far as might be without prejudice to a full underſtanding of the Senſe.

In Sum; Nothing conſiderable, nothing deſireable, nothing profitable in Thomaſius, Rider or Holyoak (yea few ſuch things, that are found in other Dictionaries, and could be compriſed in ſuch a Volume) can be ſaid to be wanting: And if therefore there be retained ſome Etymologies which may ſeem not ſo Proper, and ſo many that may ſeem not ſo Needful, the Reader then cannot complain of Defect, but may take his choice, and receive ſome ſatisfaction from ſeeing what was accounted Learning in former Ages.

And all this performed,

By conſulting the Authours mentioned generally both Ancient, Modern and Lateſt, eſpecially where any thing might rationally appear doubtful or defective: for had we not taken this courſe, many Places and Paſſages had been obſcure and imperfect ſtill.

By comparing former and truer, at leaſt various Editions of Dictionaries in preſent Uſe, yea Later and Improved Editions of Writers made uſe of by other Compilers of Dictionaries: and indeed, that we may make honourable mention of a Benefactour, much is added (though not alway with the Authours name) out of that Excellent poſthumous Work of the admirably Learned Gerardus Joannes Voſſius, his Etymologicon linguæ Latinæ.

By probable and rational Conjectures, ſubmitted to the judgement of the Reader. And Laſtly, By palpableneſs of many miſtakes, and apparent plainneſs of the ways of amendment.

As to all which, there were great pains and long time beſtowed on, and more hands then one Imployed in the Work.

Having thus endeavoured the ſatisfaction of the Reader, we ſhall onely mind him of two or three things more.

Some words (and poſſibly ſometimes things) are taken upon the credit of former Authours of like Works to this, as not unlikely they had but a traditional knowledge of them neither: and probably at the beſt found in ſome ancient and defective Books, whoſe Authours names were not Annexed, or not thought Worthy of a mention, or are now Loſt. Theſe Words we impoſe not, no more then omit: Yet endeavours have not been wanting to find out the Head of any ſuch Nilus, and the Parents of ſuch expoſititious foundlings.

We are not guilty of ſo much vanity as to pretend this Work Perfect, either in the Whole, as if nothing could be added; or in its Parts, as if nothing might be altered: Nor can any humane Work lay claim to this Priviledge, much leſs Dictionaries in which are ſo great Varieties and Intricacies, and, as to many things contained, diſſents of able Criticks.

Yet muſt we profeſs a confidence, that this Work will bear us out in declaring, That for Matter contained, and Manner of Performance, it comes not behind, but for Copiouſneſs and Accuracy, and conſequently for Uſefulneſs, exceeds what ever hath been undertaken for the Engliſh uſe.

This we thought beſt to ſpeak in Engliſh, for they to whom this Book can prove generally Uſeful, muſt underſtand that Tongue; but many, to whom the ſatiſfaction of a Preface would be acceptable, cannot underſtand Latin.

A fur-

A further Advertiſement to the READER about the Addition of the Hebrew, in this EDITION.

BEcauſe, the Hebrew, hitherto, hath been generally deficient; or, ſuperficially, and with little Care and Accuracy Inſerted; both in thoſe other Lexicons and Dictionaries, before mentioned in the Preface, and in the former Editions of this; therefore ſpecial Care was taken, to make choiſe of, and add, in their moſt Proper and convenient Places, the moſt Textual, Uſual, and Proper Hebrew-roots, and Derivatives, both after the Simple or Primitive Themes, and the Compounds of the Latin, throughout the whole Work: As likewiſe, becauſe, the right reading of the Hebrew Words, without the Points or Vowels, is ſomewhat difficult, and not much Practiſed; and the ſmalneſs of the Character could not conveniently bear the Points; therefore to facilitate the Uſe and Practiſe of Readers onely initiated, and not throughly exerciſed in the Hebrew Studies; the reading of the moſt difficult ambiguous Hebrew Words, doth follow them, in known Vulgar or Latin Characters; and that moſt frequently, where the Hebrew-roots, and Derivatives, have the ſame Letters or Conſonants; and differ onely by the Points or Vowels, for their pronunciation in reading; If the Pains taken herein do prove Uſeful and Acceptable, there is intended and preparing a Compendious Latin Hebrew Lexicon, With the Latin Words alone, before the Hebrew Primitives and Derivatives, *in their Various Conjugations, and Significations; &c.
